VIRGINIA STATEWIDE ELECTED OFFICIALS

Terry McAuliffe, Governor
Term: 2014-2018

Dear Fellow Virginians:

Ensuring that all Virginians enjoy the benefits of reliable and affordable electricity is as important today as it was when our rural citizens banded together with their neighbors to form electric cooperatives more than 75 years ago.

From the Eastern Shore to the Blue Ridge Mountains, from the suburbs of Washington, D.C., to the Tidewater region, and from the Cumberland Gap to the green fields of Southside Virginia, more than 2 million Virginians depend on member-owned, not-for-profit electric cooperatives to light and heat their homes and farms, and to power the businesses and industries that provide jobs to strengthen our state's economy.

As my term gets underway, I promise to work in partnership with Virginia's electric cooperatives to help meet the Commonwealth's growing demand for electricity. While continuing an "all of the above" approach, I will support the development of alternative and renewable energy — and encourage continued conservation and efficiency measures to reduce our dependence on traditional energy sources.

Every Virginian has a vital role in helping those of us in government determine the best policies to keep our energy costs reasonable, our air clean, and our citizens working. I encourage you to propose and support energy policies that promote job creation, reduce our dependence on foreign sources and preserve our environment.

This 2014 Virginia Legislative Guide is an excellent resource to make it easier for you to contact my office, your Lieutenant Governor, your Attorney General and your state legislators. I commend the Virginia, Maryland & Delaware Association of Electric Cooperatives and Virginia's 13 locally owned electric-distribution cooperatives for publishing this guide and making it available to you and your fellow cooperative members.

May the electric cooperatives of Virginia and their consumer-members continue to be role models for all of us as they pursue their mission of service to the citizens of the Commonwealth for this year and in decades to come.

*Sincerely,
Terry McAuliffe, Governor of Virginia*

VIRGINIA'S ELECTRIC COOPERATIVES

Electric cooperatives provide safe and reliable electric service to both rural and suburban areas throughout the Commonwealth.

Virginia's 13 consumer-owned electric cooperatives provide electricity to over 610,000 meters serving more than a million of the citizens of the Commonwealth residing in 73 of 95 counties. Electric cooperatives are not-for-profit organizations with revenues in excess of expenses being returned to their consumers. Electric cooperatives and their members are major taxpayers in the state and pay tens of millions in state and local taxes each year.

Members of cooperative boards of directors are elected by their consumer-owners. These elected representatives of the co-op membership are responsible for seeing that the cooperative is efficiently and effectively operated and maintained. The distribution cooperatives are public service companies and are regulated by the Virginia State Corporation Commission.

Electric cooperatives have a strong commitment to their communities and support, among many other things, educational opportunities for area youth. Over 1,000 Virginia youths have been sent to Richmond and Washington, D.C., on week-long legislative education trips sponsored by the electric cooperatives. This legislative guide helps fulfill the cooperatives' educational mission by informing consumers about legislators and the legislative process.

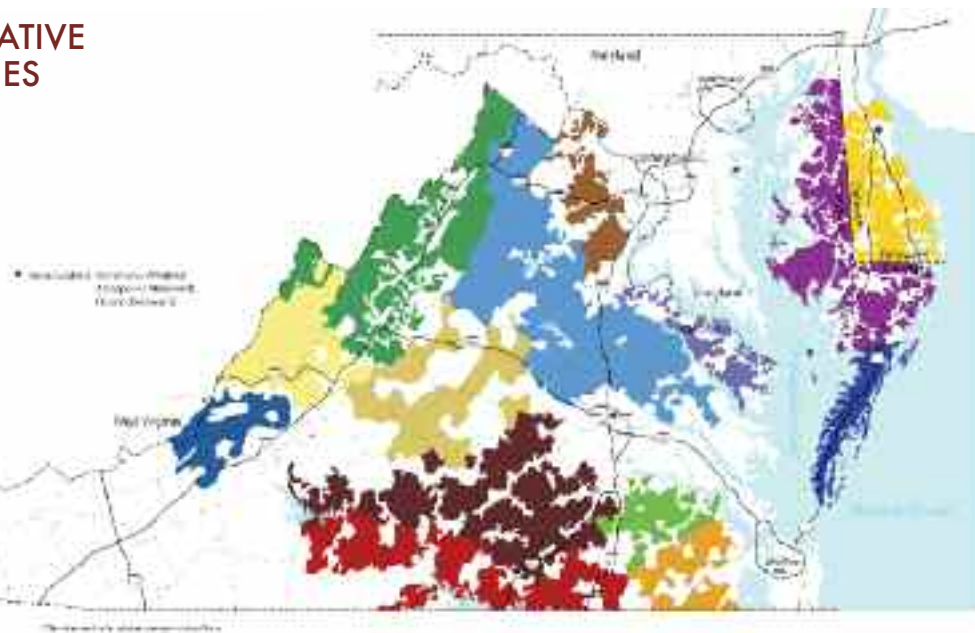

Old Dominion Electric Cooperative (ODEC) is the power supplier to nine of the state's 13 electric cooperatives, as well as one Maryland and one Delaware cooperative. ODEC's diverse power-supply portfolio that includes 11.6 percent ownership of the North Anna Nuclear Power Station and 50 percent of the coal-fired Clover Power Station in Halifax County. ODEC also owns three natural-gas-powered combustion turbine plants, one in Maryland and two in Virginia. The cooperative's renewable projects reached nearly 274 megawatts of capacity by the end of 2013.

Electric cooperatives are committed to providing environmentally sound energy. Over $350 million of the $1.2 billion cost of the Clover Power Station was for environmental safeguards. ODEC continues to operate a successful energy efficiency and conservation program with its members that can reduce peak loads by more than 10 percent. With this publication, and through strong local efforts, Virginia's 13 electric cooperatives are continuing to work to serve their consumer-owners.
